

Roatan 19 – I see the light

G Joseph Wilhelm – Roatan Honduras

The good news is, with the single injection, my sight has returned to a very functional condition. Not perfect, but well within the realm of comfort. I can see completely through what was the dark spot with only slight distortion in the periphery now, and I can read the 20/20 line on the eye chart where I could not even see it before. Good progress there, hopefully no more injections. but I was unable to do any close work on the lab other than some wood staining and sorting the kit.

The benefit from enduring this ocular malady led me to living more inside my head for two months. This can be somewhat daunting, what with all the baggage stacked in there that can fall, trip me or otherwise annoy the cogent arguments I fleetingly possess. Prior to the injection, previously unknown abilities surfaced. Such as now, in complete darkness, I know exactly the route and number of steps required to transit the bedroom, hallway and bathroom to jam my toe into the shower stall ...every time.

While bouncing around inside my cranium, I have been rethinking some of the cabinet design the details of which I won't bore you with. And since my only recently regained optic abilities left me no time, inclination or ability to pursue real advancements to the lab, this dissertation will necessarily be optimistically brief.

In the meantime, I have the slide ringing table set up and will be attempting to learn the technique. I have a set of Konus commercially prepared slides which I will ring the coverslip, replace the label with my own and present them to the world for a huge profit and public acclaim. That's the plan.

Cheers everyone!
